

Skye's the limit for duo

INTERNATIONAL recruitment specialist Skye Recruitment is working around the clock to match employers in the technical and engineering sector with the right staff.

At the helm of the company are Sophie and Kye Macdonald who set up shop about four years ago after moving to Queensland from the UK.

The pair met while working for a large UK technical recruitment firm and dreamed of starting their own company in the greener pastures of Australia.

Mr Macdonald is originally from Australia and was on an extended working holiday in the UK, and Ms Macdonald is a UK native. Skye Recruitment specialist consultant for Queensland, Jamie Holden, said the couple brought together their extensive knowledge of the UK and Australian recruitment environments to form Skye.

“The plan for Sophie and Kye was to mould together the best of the UK technical recruitment model and the best of the Australian recruitment model,” Mr Holden said.

Skye Recruitment now has a dedicated staff of 15 and are the 2010 North-West News

Business Achiever Award winners in the Professional Services category.

Mr Holden said the award had helped reinvigorate the team at Skye and reiterate their belief in their community.

“We try to do things differently and we try to do the right thing by both our employers and our candidates,” Mr Holden said.

“We are a recruitment agency which tries to nurture our relationships with both parties because we believe in trying to attract quality candidates and work with them throughout the years to match them with the right jobs and employers.”

“We recruit for employers all over the world, and we are proud to do so from our Stafford base.”